"Abner, what do you think of this haunt'n dog?"

"Bring him over heah in mah line o' vision and I'll look but I won't think."

These Won't Think.

1. Radio Mike. Mike is proud of his radio. It has more volumn than any two sets on the floor. At eleven o'clock when the lights go out, Mike and the radio get their rest. And the Philco is more exhausted than its owner. Mike never touches his light switch. He flipped it "On" at the beginning of the fall session and it hasn't been turned off since, not even during the day. When the fellows across the court yell at him to tune down the dance bands during their study hour, Mike just sits and chuckles. Mike does not think. We're waiting for the day he will do unto others what he would wish them to do unto him.

2. Ike Leterdoit. Ike is from the city. Before he came to Notre Dame he hung up his clothes neatly in his clothes closet and kept order in his room. A strong-armed mother made him a model of neatness. Now after three years of college life, Ike has made up for lost time. He has a maid on his floor, and "It's up to her to keep things clean. What's she paid for?" Yesterday a terrible stench come from the direction of the radiator. Ike laughed when he saw it was only four pairs of dirty socks thrown there early in the semester being steamed to death. In his economics class Ike argues vehemently for justice and charity for the laboring class. When Ike begins to think the maid will go into a faint.

3. I.M. Offbeam. Offbeam is a senior. His soul has been a blackout for over two months. He's holding out until he can work up a little feeling for a confession. Why fear? He had a granddad who stayed away from the sacraments for years, and a priest got to him before he died. When I.M begins to consider how near the precipice he is treading, he will come back to fall at the feet of Our Blessed Lord and ask for mercy. And he will obtain it.

Bullets Make Them Think.

A grad of a year ago writes to one of the men of Sorin from the island where he is stationed:

"We are pretty lucky when it comes to religious practices. We are able to get to Mass and Holy Communion about every other week.

'There are no atheists in fox holes', says a sergeant in the Philippines. Take it from me, that's more truth than fiction.

I know a few who you'd never guess went to church a day in their lives. They'd cuss every time they would open up their mouth.

But it was a different story once hot lead started flying around."

If Mike, Ike and Offbeam would go before the Blessed Sacrament every night for five minutes before retiring and THINK, consideration for others will enter their lives.
