Bachelor Alumni Comment on Mixed Marriage

"I couldn't go for one for myself; and friends who have tried them admit they lack a fundamental flavor."

"It seems to me that there are enough good Catholic girls for Catholic young men."

"Did you ever try to mix oil and water? If so, did the mixture produce a worthwhile result?"

"The dice are loaded."

"They should be called 'mixed-up' instead. I want a wife who sees the way I do on religion and what it implies."

"I used to think they were O.K. Have changed my mind during the last three years. From what I have seen they are not so successful."

"The offspring of such a union, I abhor them. A mixed marriage is an equivocating apostasy."

"Never should be allowed. I am the son of a mixed marriage and know the two different worlds such parents live in."

"My father is a non-Catholic, but a very good man. He would not let any of us attend non-Catholics schools. But there always has been something missing at home."

"Nobody but God in Heaven knows the sorrow my mother has suffered just by going to church alone. In other respects she could not have picked a better husband. Mother's advice is to pick a Catholic for your mate. She also realizes that she is one in a thousand by getting a good non-Catholic husband."

"Don't like it. Don't even like to date non-Catholic girls for fear I might fall in love with one of them."

"I don't believe in them. I gave up a girl that I loved because she wasn't a Catholic."

"I think they are dangerous. A friend of mine is now contemplating marrying a non-Catholic -- even now their troubles are serious."

"My father was a non-Catholic. After raising twelve children as Catholics, my mother said that if she were starting over she would never attempt a mixed marriage."
