I Love The Smile of an Irishman

I love the voice of an Irishman,
I love the smile in his eye:
I love every bit of an Irishman.
And I'll tell you the reason why!

An Irishman's heart is a kind one,
And true to his Irishman's style
He'll invite you into his kitchen.
And then your heart he'll beguile.

With his stories of banshies and wee folk,
And his tales of the dulce from the sea,
And his songs of coocles and muscles
That he sang as a boy on the lea.

He'll offer you victuals, he'll offer you tea,
He'll act as a man of great wealth:
He'll offer to share all the good that he has,
And he'll stand and he'll drink to your health.

There's a bit of blarney within him,
As bright as the green of the sod
That stretched itself like a carpet
For St. Patrick who walked with God.

I love the land of the Irishman,
I love the thatched roof that it had:
I love every bit of the Emerald Isle
For it gave me my mother and dad. (G.E.H.)
