A Sure Place in History

Father Mathis is dead. Yesterday afternoon, soon after two, his soul went before the Great High-priest he served so well and so tirelessly. Few have loved the Church so ardently as this little man of God. Few have done so much in so short a time to bring others to love the Church, too. His years in the Congregation of Holy Cross numbered fifty five. His years in the priesthood numbered forty six. After 1936, his interest in the Church's liturgy became so intense that he now has a sure place in the history of the Church in this country. His early training in architecture and Holy Scripture and his long experience in mission work served him well for the work that was to occupy the last years of his life. In 1947, he inaugurated at Notre Dame the Summer School of Liturgy that has brought to the University some of the great scholars and teachers of Theology from around the world.

Those who know only Father Mathis' more recent accomplishments might pass over the years he spent in Washington, D.C. During those years, he helped found the Medical Mission Sisters and the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade.

Yesterday he looked over the long list of his good deeds, probably for the first time.

May the hearts he gladdened during his life and the many who will benefit in the future from his legacy remember him now, and never forget how much he loved the Church.
