Patriotism

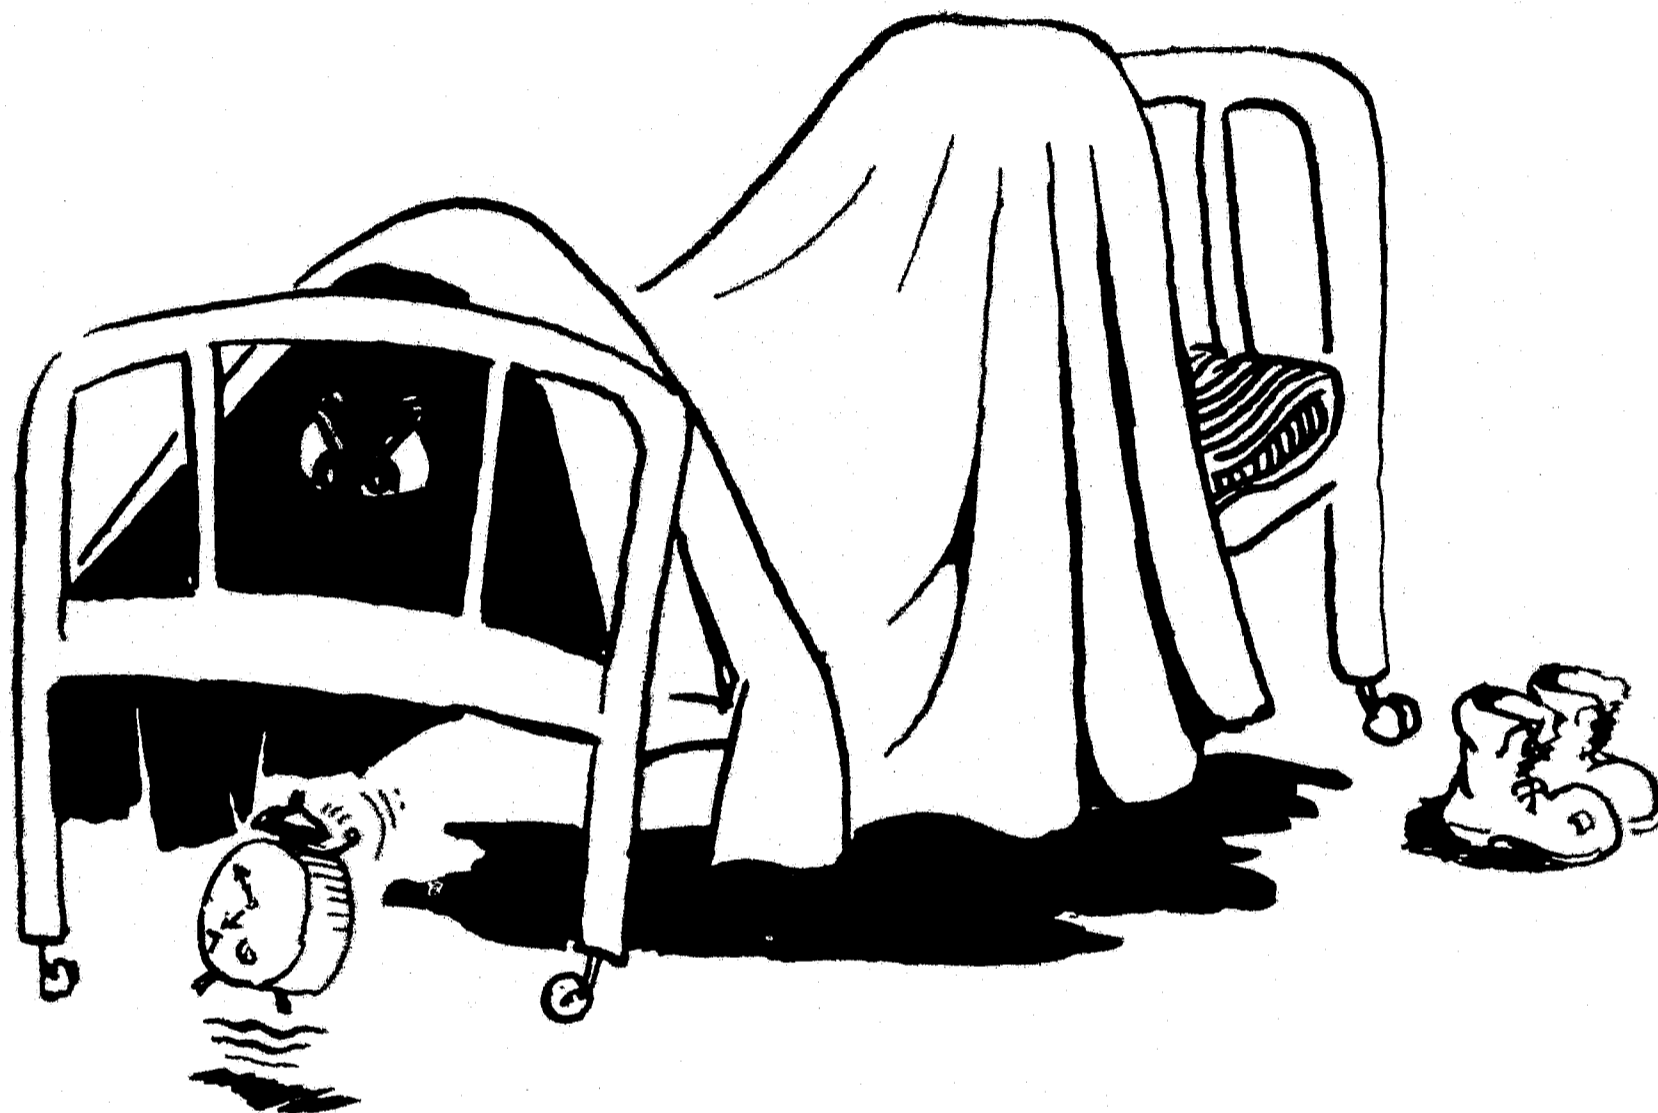

by Robert C. Hartnett, S.J.

1. The true patriot seldom labels himself a patriot.
2. The true patriot embraces under "love of country" everything that preserves and promotes its moral and material, spiritual and temporal character.
3. The true patriot keeps his eye on the common good, properly conceived, of his local community, of his State and of his nation.
4. The true patriot sees his own country and all other countries as members of the family of nations, united by the indestructible moral bonds of a common human nature and a common human condition.
5. The true patriot defends the rights of every "person".
6. The true patriot upholds constitutional government and the rule of law.
7. The true patriot tempers his zeal in order to avoid imputing unpatriotic motives to his fellow citizens unless their conduct leaves no alternative.
8. The true patriot devotes himself to the public good as far as his time and talents allow.
9. The true patriot counts the worth of his contributions to his country in terms of what they cost him in time, money, efforts and convenience.
10. The true patriot, finally, encourages patriotism in others in every way he can.

THIS IS THE WEEK that proves to be the "shakedown", the testing time. The resolutions made less than one week ago are being put to the test. From the looks of things in the early morning hours around where I am, there are going to be quite a few who'll wash out.

We refer of course to the many who started off last Wednesday resolved to attend Mass daily during Lent. We lost a few of them on Saturday and a few more this morning. If you are one of those who'd have been caught in the pose below this morning, give some thought to the words below.

Where is the balance in our lives when 90 per cent of our emphasis is directed to the body and only a hit and miss program for survival is allotted to the soul? Attending Mass under pressure once a week can hardly be considered adequate diet for souls that should constantly feed at the banquet table of the Lord.
